CARTOONS AND COMMENTS.

THE OTHER DAY a clergyman in a Massachusetts town, probably seeking how he might advertise himself, preached a sermon in denunciation of the Sunday newspaper. He said a great many foolish things; and among them he accused the Sunday papers of being "venal." A New York daily paper asked him what he meant by that remarkable statement, and he wrote and explained himself—to his own satisfaction. His explanation showed that he was not sufficiently diligent in his Master's service to learn the English language, that he might preach so as to be understood of the people. He thought that the word "venal" meant anything that, in his eyes, was bad. He had no shadow of a specific charge of venality to bring against any paper—he had simply used "venal" as a word of general condemnation, like "objectionable" or "undesirable." And he was just as complacent and cheerful about it as if he had never heard of the sin of bearing false witness against one's neighbor.

It is such men as this clergyman, excitable, hot-headed men, hopelessly inaccurate and uncertain, and—though they do not mean to be—untruthful and unfair, who stand in the way of any reasonable attempt to settle the just boundary between the liberty and the license of the press. They are like the political reformers who impute wholesale corruption to every set of politicians of which they disapprove, and who thereby make real reform impossible. Such folk cry "wolf!" when there is no wolf; and when the true alarm is given, it falls on dull ears and discouraged spirits. There are many things about the newspaper press which might well be bettered or abolished; but not much can be done by practical men while the silly folk, who always have the loudest voices, cry out in indiscriminate vituperation of every thing, good and bad, in any newspaper that shows its face on Sunday.

This is a great pity. The American newspaper press is the most useful institution in the country, next to the Supreme Court of the United States. It is our one great means of intercommunication and popular education; and, in the main, it is faithful to its trust. There are poor newspapers and bad newspapers; but most newspapers try to give the news as they best can get it and give expression to the ideas of the people and of the leaders of the people, as fairly as they can. No one paper is perfect: many are weak and unfit for their position: few, very few, let us be thankful, deserve to be called venal, Sundays or week-days.

Yet it is not to be denied that the newspaper far too often abuses its power and misuses its opportunities—and only more on the first day of the week because it then may have twenty-four pages instead of its usual twelve. If a regular reader of newspapers were to refrain from reading all daily journals whatever for six months, he would be shocked, when he began again to read, to see how much space his favorite papers devoted to tittle-tattle, gossip, and cheap scandal. He would be disgusted at the repeated invasions of domestic and personal privacy, and he would wonder why a great public print should devote its energies to creating and satisfying a morbid, unhealthy, popular taste for personalities—a taste that grows with what it feeds on.

For that is the worst of this morbid taste—its persistent growth. It is a taste like the taste for strong condiments and alcoholic drinks. The growth is insensible: moderation slides almost unconsciously into excess. Neither the purveyor nor the consumer of scandal knows how far he is going. It is well enough, no doubt, to gratify a reasonable public curiosity about prominent people. We all like to know what manner of men our great poets and politicians and financiers and artists are. And it does no harm to tell the world that Mr. James Russell Lowell has a low and pleasant voice; that Mr. Grover Cleveland is fond of going fishing; that Mr. Jay Gould is a quiet, home-keeping body, and that Mr. James McNeil Whistler has some very eccentric ways and manners. But when the spice of these revelations begins to pall on the popular palate, the men who make the newspapers must go a little further. Then they have their choice between telling certain things about these well-known men which, interesting though they may be, are none of the public's business; or of descending a little, and gossiping about people who have no such claim to the popular attention.

They may yield to one temptation or to the other: the mischievous result is the same. Some one's privacy is invaded; something must be dragged to light that ought by rights to remain in darkness. It may be a foible of the great man that the reporter has discovered and presents to the public; it may be a bit of news about the obscurer man that, innocent enough in itself, is not what he or his family would care to announce to the world. It is certainly something which violates the decent proprieties of journalism—which may indulge an idle curiosity; but which can answer no good end. No one is the better for knowing that Mr. Greatman sometimes loses his temper and uses profane language; or that Mr. Littlepoet eats his dinner at a table whereof the shortness of one leg is inadequately pieced out with a wad of paper.

The men who write this stuff do not mean to do wrong. They slip into scandal-mongering bit by bit. Jones writes up Mr. Greatman's house. Smith comes after him to write it up. It is the same house. The rooms have walls, ceilings, floors, doors and windows. Smith's story is likely to be tedious. He finds out that Mr. Greatman scratches his matches on the door-jamb, and he tells the tale to the world. Jones is outdone. He goes to the house of Mr. Littlepoet, and writes that up. To outdo Smith's scratched door-jamb he tells of the short table-leg—nay, he must do more. There is a hole in the parlor carpet and there is a spot of candle-grease on the piano. Down they go in Jones's note-book, and out they come in Jones's newspaper, to tell to all humanity what a sloven a man of genius may be, and how poor a housekeeper hardworked, much-worried Mrs. Littlepoet certainly is.

There's no great mischief in all that, perhaps, unless Greatman and Littlepoet are thin-skinned and sensitive. But it leads to much worse. It leads, for instance, to "sensation scares" about the health of prominent men, such as the hideous assault which has lately been made on Mr. J. G. Blaine's well-known hypochondriacal sensitiveness. Whether Mr. Blaine is ill or well, the attempt to hold him up to the public as a doomed man is indecent to the last degree; and its indecency is not lessened by the fact that Mr. Blaine has been none too scrupulous, himself, in his methods of attacking political opponents. The attempt to scare him to death for the purpose of creating a "sensation" is cruel and base; and we sincerely hope that what results from it will be no more serious than what suggested it. One thing seems to be undeniable: when newspaper tittle-tattle reaches such an extreme of malignancy and falsehood, it calls for rebuke from people who have more sense and knowledge than to fling the accusation of "venality" at every public print that may happen to displease them.

Songs for Summer.

A BACHELOR'S RETROSPECT.

A GILDED CUPID on the fountain stood,
And from his arrow's tip a jet and spray
Fell tinkling, all the dreamy Summer day,
Close by the dragon with the throat of blood.

It chanced that Evelyn and I had come,
After a devious walk beneath the trees,
To the cool basin, rippled by the breeze.
There we sat down, and for a while were dumb.

At length fair Evelyn stretched forth her hand,
Like wistful child, and bared her snowy arm,
And caught the drops among her fingers warm,
Pleased with the sparkling spray and coolness bland.

Then, suddenly, with laughter in her eyes,
She turned, and showered me with a tiny mist,
That some far-shooting ray of sunlight kist
Into a little bow of paradise.

Down dropped the lashes on her lovely cheek,
And in a moment I had uttered all,
While wimple-wimple went the water's fall,
And seemed to give me silver words to speak.

O Cupid! blest thine arrow and that day,
The rainbow mist, and Evelyn's mischief sweet,
The dragon, with his clawed and pointed feet —
But, most of all, the little murmured Nay!

Paul Pastnor.

THE BABY NEXT DOOR.

MY NEIGHBOR'S BABE is fair and sweet,
With dimpled hands, and soft, pink feet,
With all the Summer in his eyes,
While in his lips what honey lies!

My neighbor's baby loves me so,
His glances follow where I go,
And when his clinging touch I feel,
No words my pleasure can reveal.

My neighbor's babe brings back the joy
That stirred my pulses when a boy;
His breath, more sweet than flowers rare,
Blows from my brain the webs of care.

Ah, yes, a treasure rare is he,
A jewel without flaw to me;
For, I adopt this custom wise —
I bear him homeward when he cries!

THE OLD GATE.

I. First Verse. 1.
HOW OFTEN I and Seraphine,
That girl of Farmer Sator's,
Upon that rustic gate have hung,
A loving pair of gaters!

II. Second Verse. 2.
It was Love's Portal. Never gate
Was loved so by a lover;
The little pigs crawled under it,
But Cupid, he went over.

III. Third Verse. 3.
'T was hard to open and to close,
As many a gate one sees is,
And stood a squeaking monument
To numerous tight squeezes.

IV. Fourth Verse. 4.
No matter how the weather was,
My happiness I sought there;
There was a something in the catch,
Perhaps, for I was caught there.

V. Fifth Verse. 5.
That gate to me now opes and shuts
Without the least of bother,
Because I married Seraphine,
And live here with her father.

AN UNPLEASANT LESSON.

BOGGS CARED little for his dress,
Till he got a stiff reminder
That a man, just like a book,
Needs assistance from the binder.

On an uptown Avenue
He had chanced to lose his way;
And he asked a passing stranger:
"Beg your pardon; tell me, pray—"

But with interrupting haste,
Passing quickly out of range,
The silk-hatted party answered:
"Sorry; but I've got no change!"

HALF-TRUE TALES:

Stories founded on fiction.

AT THE LONELY PORT.*

MY DRIVER HAD told me a great deal about Canada, about her government, her statesmen, her editors, her orators. Had he stopped at the affairs of his own country, he would have displayed a fund of information surprisingly large, considering that he was a livery-stable assistant, forced to do all his readings "between times."

But his knowledge of men and things extended far over the borders, and enabled him to compare, one with another, the great men of the world; to speak critically of the United States, her institutions and her industries, her lawyers, her actors and her horses.

He had quoted a passage from a speech made in a celebrated criminal trial in the States, and expressed great admiration for the brilliant lawyer who made it.

"I notice," he said, "that when he conducts the prosecution very few criminals escape."

It was growing dark and cold. I was numb from sitting long in the buggy, and sat silent, wondering how far we were from Port Albert Edward, and what sort of a place it would be to rest in over night.

On this point Simeon's information was defective. "It was n't much of a place," he thought; but he could say no more, for he had not driven over the shore road in many years. "People did n't go that way much," he said.

From the top of the hill, a moment later, we saw the Port; and Bob, pricking up his ears at the prospect of rest and oats, pulled impatiently on the lines until, getting his head at the foot of the hill, he trotted at a smart pace over the gravel road, and came to a stop in front of the hotel, dancing when Simeon pulled him to one side so that I might jump out between the wheels.

"It does n't look very inviting," said Simeon.

He referred to the big weather-beaten hotel; but he might have included the whole of Port Albert Edward.

A narrow, muddy stream running into the lake formed the "Port." There was a remnant of a dock, a long stretch of dilapidated pile-work, a great deserted warehouse with gaping holes where windows had been, and a door half-buried in drifts of sand; there was an old store with rusty iron bars across its closed shutters; and over against the dark hill-side a dozen weather-worn houses made up the residence portion of the town. On the beach, a little forest of tall black poles stood out against the sky, and three or four fishermen were stretching nets upon them, the pulleys creaking dismally as they hauled on the lines.

I stepped across a gap in the floor of the hotel verandah and tried the door. It was locked. I walked around to the other door. It was nailed fast. Then I heard one of the fishermen halloo; and when I looked toward him, he pointed to a house which we had passed a few rods back, and called out:

"Go to Lawrie's!"

"Come over to Lawrie's," I said to Simeon, and I trotted, a little stiffly, in that direction while the restive Bob whirled the buggy round, and scenting a race, put on a burst of speed that left me several lengths behind at Lawrie's gate.

A portly old gentleman was moving slowly toward the house from the cow-shed. He walked with the aid of a heavy stick and carried a pail of foaming milk.

"Is this Mr. Lawrie?" I asked.

"Ay, ay."

"Do you sometimes take care of travelers?"

"Ay, when they coom this wai, though I'm only an agriculturist, myself. Well, well, I'll see, I'll see. Are ye cold? Now, just wait till I tell th' old 'oman to put a stinck o' wood i' th' stove. Well, well, I'll do the best I can fer ye. I know what ye'd like, for I've been a great ntraveler, myself, and glad of a comfortable stoppin' place; but ye are here now, an' mebbe they'll be no more in a month, an' we can't be allus ready, ye know. Well, well, ndrive right into th' barn, Willie, an' we'll fix th' pony snug. It's a long drive ye've had, I'm thinkin'. Th' rig's not been hereabout before."

The last words of the old man came from an inner room in the house where he had gone to get the fire underway. Without his aid we made Bob as comfortable as possible in the old ramshackle barn, gave him some hay to busy himself with while cooling off, and then we entered the house.

Lawrie was on his knees before the parlor stove.

"T' old 'oman's gettin' th' supper," he said, as he arose laboriously, and seated himself in a chair; "it'll not be munch," he continued; "but ye'll excuse it, I'm thinkin'. Well, well, make yourselves as comfortable as ye can. Th' fire'll be blazin' soon. Ye went to the hotel. Well, well, th' license run out six months ago, an' th' landlord moved awai. No man can pay two hundred dollars fer a license in these parts. I do a little hotel ntrade myself; but in a temp'rance wai, all in a temp'rance wai. They be strict wi' th' law in these parts, Mister — very strict wi' th' law. Did ye but ask me for a nip, cold though ye be, ye could be hauled up an' fined. Him that asks is the same as him that sells. Well, well, they can't stop a man from drinkin' his own, an' I want ye to take a drop wi' me — mind ye, wi' me — Annie!"

A moment later, I heard the gentle clink of a glass against the door knob, and then a young girl came into the room.

Oh, I wish I could say this better!

I wish I could brighten the page with a description of this gentle, clear-browed girl, just as she herself brightened the old parlor when she stepped across the threshold.

The power of a Gentle Presence! The old hair-cloth parlor "set," the cheap vases of dried grass on the narrow wooden mantel, the faded carpet, the few old books and ancient photographs on the shaky little table — all these mean things — transformed into objects of life and color at the coming of a young girl with a bottle of whiskey and three little tumblers! No. Don't say it! The bottle had nothing to do with the transformation. That remained when the girl, never once raising her eyes, had gone away; but all the brightness went out of the room with her.

Observe, however, that at the first call she brought the bottle.

"There was a man from the States named Stumbbs," said Mr. Lawrie, handing a glass to me and one to Simeon, "who used to coom hereabout to buy wheant; an' one dai he coom to me — he used to stomp with me — an' says he:

"Mr. Lawrie,' says he, 'I have a lot o' wheant all boughtnt that I can't take.'

"Why,' says I, 'how is that?'

"The money I enpected has not come,' says he; 'an' I'm short two hundren an' twelve dollars.'

"Oh, man!' says I, takin' a roll of bills from my vest, 'take what you want o' that.'

"I'm a stranger to you,' says he.

"Never mind,' says I; 'we're here to help one another.'

"Well, Mr. Stumbbs said he never did hear o' the like o' that, an' he went out around the country an' bought th' wheant, an' three days later his money come. I've been told that I was foolish; but ye see, I knew from the look o' the man he'd not betray me. He was a man much like yourself, sir, in looks."

There was a sly twinkle in Mr. Lawrie's eye, when he handed me the bottle, which I afterward understood.

Mrs. Lawrie came to say that supper was ready; and we sat down to one of the most satisfactory meals I have ever eaten. As I remember it, now, there was not much in the way of food, and what there was was decidedly plain, and the tea was weak.

But the Gentle Presence was there.

All through the meal, Mr. Lawrie told tales of things which had happened to him in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, San Francisco and other large cities of the United States; and I let him talk on without interruption. But for the evidence of my own eyes, I thought, gazing across the table, I would never believe that such a flower could blossom and live in this dreary place; and listening to the old man's tales, I said, "Of a truth, fact is stranger than fiction."

After supper, Mr. Lawrie took me back into the parlor to have a good talk. Simeon went out to say good-night to Bob; and although I heard him re-enter the house, he did not join us.

I sat in the parlor an hour, but Annie Lawrie came not; and, pleading weariness, I asked the old gentleman to show me to my room.

Left alone there, I seated myself on the bed and fell into a reverie. I could not get her out of my mind. Why should such a girl suffer the cruel fate to be buried alive in this musty, decayed, forsaken old place? Surely it must be a most miserable existence for one such as she. She must be filled with a constant and hopeless longing for deliverance which might never come. The light of her eye would dim and her bright face wrinkle before she became old. I felt an overwhelming sense of pity and helplessness.

I heard a voice in the kitchen, and opened my door to listen. Simeon was quoting from a speech by the Honorable Edward Blake.

"I am very sorry," he says, "that the honorable gentleman on the other side of the house has allowed himself to make the great mistake of supposing that——" The climax came in guttural tones from the pit of Simeon's stomach, and I did not hear what the honorable gentleman had presumed to suppose; but there were expressions of approval in feminine voices, and then —

"I once hearnd a greant speench —"

I shut the door and went to bed.

"Now, ye have a long ride before ye," said Mr. Lawrie, the next morning, when Bob stood harnessed at the door; "and before ye go, ye must take a nip o' th' stuff with me. I got a lentter from a man in New York," he continued, as he handed us the tumblers, "wantin' me to coom down there an' buy green goods. Ye've heard o' them rascals, I suppose. I have that lentter, now; an' I've been thinkin' what I'd do with it."

"Send it to the chief of police in New York," said I.

"Ah, but man; that might get him into trouble."

"Trouble!" said I; "he's a criminal."

"Well, well, I know," said Mr. Lawrie, with the same expression that I had noticed the night before. "He's breankin' the law; but he's trusted me, an' I'll not manke him trouble." Then Mr. Lawrie handed over the bottle.

"How much is my bill, Mr. Lawrie?" I asked.

"Well, well, let's see — supper, bed and breakfast for th' pony an' two more: that's a dollar and a half, an' — four times ten is forty — a dollar an' ninety cents, sir. Well, well, I've not a dime in change, I'll have to give you a couple o' good cigars. Ay, that makes it. Well, good luck, an' when you coom again, I hope we'll be able to treat ye benter."

The wheels were whirring over the gravel before the old man had finished speaking, and in a few minutes we had climbed over the hill, and Port Albert Edward was lost to view.

"It will be long before we see that place again, Simeon." I said it rather sadly.

"You'll be on the cars bound for home to-night," he replied; "but I'll be back there to-morrow."

"I thought you were going home by the other road. It's a dozen miles shorter, is n't it?"

"I've changed my mind," said Simeon. "The fact is, I told her I'd be back to-morrow."

"You told — her?"

"Yes; she said she hoped I would. Says she don't see a feller in a dog's age. Ain't it the last spot on the Lord's footstool?"

I never can understand why it is that a man residing in or traveling through a country remote from civilization is sure to lose his head over any fairly good-looking girl he happens to meet.

"AMERICA AND THE AMERICANS," BY MR. CHUMLEY-CHUMLEY, OF LONDON.

A FEW EXTRACTS, SHOWING HOW HE RECEIVED MUCH VALUABLE INFORMATION FROM OBLIGING AMERICANS, AND MADE A BIG HIT.

"As we sailed up the Bay, I saw a procession of flat-boats loaded with earth, on which many persons were seated. An American fellow-passenger told me this was a pleasure excursion of the Mafia, an Italian society, which, he assured me, was very popular in America."

"I was surprised that the famous Museum of Art, which was shown to me by an intelligent New Yorker, is a small edifice, covered all over with hideous pictures, and containing only a few human curiosities, and some stuffed animals."

"The lack of personal dignity shown by President Harrison and his advisers is deplorable. I saw them seated around a table in a public bar-room, drinking and smoking. The polite Washingtonian who pointed them out told me they were holding a Cabinet meeting."

"While in Boston, a bright American lad who acted as my guide, showed me the celebrated Oliver Wendell Holmes, walking along the street. His appearance is not prepossessing, and he squints to a painful degree."

"In front of a shop in New Jersey I saw exposed for sale a number of wire masks and some heavy clubs. On questioning a native, I learned that these are used as a protection against the fierce and bloodthirsty mosquitos, which in this State, I was informed, attain an enormous size."

(From the London Times.)
"Mr. Chumley-Chumley, whose valuable and instructive book on America has met with an enormous sale in Great Britain, is the lion of the season."

SOME REMARKS ABOUT VENICE.

VENICE IS LOCATED in the dampest spot of Italy, and it strikes the stranger as being the worst drained spot he ever struck.

The people don't seem to be able to keep the water off the streets. Yet they don't mind it at all. They say it saves the expense of sprinkling to lay the dust.

The Venetians number about 400,000, and a great many of them come under the head of the floating population.

The report that the inhabitants of Venice are web-footed I regard as a weak invention of jealous neighbors and having no foundation in fact.

Locomotion is mostly performed by means of skiffs with turned-up noses, called gondolas. These boats are painted a sombre black, but yet are a laughable craft, for each is provided with a gondo-leer.

One of the principal buildings of Venice is the Doge's palace, a structure which has acquired the conflagration habit. It has been burned down several times; but whether or not this is a Doge to get the insurance money we are not informed. Perhaps the lack of water to extinguish the fires has something to do with the numerous conflagrations.

The Doge is the chief magistrate of Venice and corresponds to our Mayor. The Doge's palace, therefore, may be called a Mayor's nest.

They used to have a queer custom of wedding Venice to the Adriatic. The ceremony consisted of throwing a ring into the sea from the Doge's state gondola. From this custom came the American idea, put into practice semi-occasionally, of throwing a city ring overboard at the annual election.

As this maritime wedding was performed every year, the inference is that either the sea or the town procured a divorce once in twelve months, which does not speak well for the constancy of either.

There are many celebrated libraries in Venice, also, the people being a well-read community — Venetian red, one might say.

AND SUBURBAN EXPEDIENCY.

VERY BLUE LAWS.

JACK (strolling home from the evening services).—There used to be a law in New England prohibiting kissing on Sunday.
MAUDE (cooly).—Well, it is n't in force now, is it?
(And the moon went behind a cloud to laugh.)

NOT AN ALL-AROUND WORLD, AFTER ALL.

FIRST DEADLY ENEMY.—The world is wide enough for us both.
SECOND DEADLY ENEMY.—Yes; but it is not deep enough for you.

CAUTIOUS MAN.

MRS. WORRYS (awaking her lord).—Charles, get up. I think baby has the croup.
MR. WORRYS.—Had n't I better wait till you are sure?

HOW SHE WHEELS.

Oppressed by hard luck, now I see
What 's meant by Fortune's wheel;
For when the old girl reaches me
She turns upon her heel!

"AND THE BAND PLAYED—"

PROPRIETOR.—What are you yelling in that thing for?
MR. ROORAL.—Wa-all, I 'm a-tryin' to git the center office; but thar 's a band paradin' round down thar, an' everybody 'pears to be out lis'nin' to it.

FATAL VALOR.

"A tough fired at a policeman yesterday with a heavy calibre revolver."
"And what did the policeman do? Did he arrest the tough?"
"No. He arrested the bullet."

THAT'S ABOUT IT.

"Papa, what is an agnostic?" asked Johnny Cumso.
"An agnostic, Johnny, is a man who knows very little and is not sure of that."

ACCORDING TO RULE.

It is feared that another Indian uprising is imminent.—Daily Papers.

An Indian rip-up is a glorious thing.
Drink deep, or touch not the Piegan spring.
Punch all the Flatheads, kill off all the Sioux,
And serve the Creeks and Choctaws as you choose.
History shows us that the quickest way
To bring the heathen heavenward is to slay.

A LIFE-SAVING FASHION.

"For heaven's sake, a boat, Captain! My wife has fallen off the pier!"
"Is she dressed in the style?"
"Yes; but quick!"
"Oh, there 's no hurry. She 'll float!"

THE POWER OF GOLD.

MISS MIDAS.—Do you expect to go to college next year, Mr. Cræsus?
YOUNG CRÆSUS.—Not much. Father is going to have them bring it to me.

HAPPY MAN.

"Ah, Jonesy, old man," said Hicks, as he and Jones walked home from the Club; "there 's a light in your window for you. You married men—"
"By George, so there is!" returned Jones. "Let 's go back to the Club."

ADVICE TO TRAMPS: —but, then, no tramp will buy PUCK, and no purchaser will throw it away; so what 's the use of giving any advice to tramps here?

IF THE GUESTS don't

must "shut up."

THE WHIRLIGIG OF

MAN'S PLACE IN NATURE
— To Work for what
Other Creatures Get Free.

"SPORT OF THE WAVES"
— The Yachtsman.

SHE.—You know, Dick, that Papa is not nearly as rich as he is reported to be.
HE.—Oh, well, he is likely to make a fortune before he dies. I shall have to take my chances like all the rest of the fellows, I suppose.

THE EUROPEAN SITUATION.

WE'RE WAITING, Europeans, to hear the bullets sing.
When shall we see the lances flash and hear the sabres ring?
There are rumors, there are "cablegrams," of trouble on frontiers,
Of numerous uprisings they have "well-founded fears,"
Your armies mobilize at dawn, and disappear at night,
You march and countermarch about, but—somehow—never fight.

Both night and day your hammers swing to drive the rivets home;
Gay Paris calls for vengeance, there are murmurings in Rome;
Berlin "casts jealous eyes on—" this, and London "frowns on" that,
The consols fall, and funds decline, and Russian bonds are flat;
You strap your knapsacks to your backs, your girths are buckled tight,
You all breathe hard and grit your teeth, but—somehow—never fight.

We've seen small boys do much the same, when coming out of school;
One runs against another, who says that he's a fool.
All gather round; a chip is found and poised upon a shoulder,
One cries: "Let's see you knock that off!" and, unassailed, grows bolder.
Both frown, and scowl, both clench their fists and direful threats are made.
But Wilhelm "dar's n't" strike out first, and Jean Crapaud's "afraid."

We would advise you all at once to grab each other's throats—
Or else—turn down your rolled up sleeves and reassume your coats.
There's a noted Agriculturist, we Yankees all delight in,
Who said: "Boys! quit your quarrelin', and get right at your fightin'."
"Our voice is still for"—peace, of course; but if it's war, so be it.
But get to work. We're growing old and won't be here to see it!

Benjamin Webster.

BOSTON WINS AGAIN.

MR. GOTHAM.—We are to have a magazine in New York which is to print only rejected articles.
MISS PENELOPE ADAMS (of Boston).—I suppose it is to be published in New York so as to be right at the fountain head of that sort of article?

HUMBLE ENOUGH.

MRS. GADBY.—Mrs. Henry Peck has her husband in complete subjection.
MRS. CLATTER.—From what do you judge?
MRS. GADBY.—I asked him a question the other night, and he turned to her and said: "Let me think."

THEY WOULD N'T STAY.

MRS. KIDLESS.—How many servants do you keep?
MRS. BIDLESS (mournfully).—None.

THE MAN who sells honey is on a bee-line to success.

"TIME IS MONEY," but unlike money it is wasted when it is least used.

TRUTH IS MIGHTY, but if a good share of it were not choked into silence this would seem but a sorry world.

IF THE Night Owl stays out long enough he becomes the Early Bird.

BEWARE OF the praise of your enemy. What pleases him can do you little good.

A BIGOT is a man who is dead sure of something he does n't know anything about.

The name of SOHMER & Co. upon a piano is a guarantee of its excellence.

TAKING A STAND.

KITTY WINSLOW.—Physical culture is quite a fad of mine; see, for instance, how well Mr. Van Nobs stands.
TOM DE WITT.—Oh, yes; he stands better against a dark-blue portiere than he does financially.

A CONSISTENT ARTIST.

MISS PEARL WHITE.—I wish you to paint my portrait.
DOBBINS.—I'm sorry, Madam; but I can't do it.
MISS PEARL WHITE.—Why not?
DOBBINS.—I never copy other paintings.

SHE HATED TO TROUBLE HIM.

MISS BRECKINRIDGE (of Virginia, to her BEST YOUNG MAN).—John, I'm afraid you will have to drive back home. I—I—I've left my ball-dress there.
HER BEST YOUNG MAN (who is driving her to the County Ball).—The—The mischief you have! My dear little girl! Why did n't you find it out before we'd come five miles through this Virginia mud?
MISS BRECKINRIDGE.—Oh, I did, John! I knew it two hours ago, but I hated so much to trouble you.

ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS

The only safe way for purchasers is to insist on having the genuine article, and not allow themselves to be swindled by having plasters said to be "just as good," or "containing superior ingredients," imposed upon them. These are only tricks to sell inferior goods that no more compare with ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS than copper does with gold.

One trial of Allcock's Porous Plasters will convince the most skeptical of their merits.

The eminent HENRY A. MOTT, Jr., Ph.D., F.C.S., late Government Chemist, certifies.

"My investigation of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER shows it to contain valuable and essential ingredients not found in any other plaster, and I find it superior to and more efficient than any other plaster."

Beware of imitations, and do not be deceived by misrepresentation. Ask for ALLCOCK'S, and let no solicitation or explanation induce you to accept a substitute.

Although small of size and modest of style, Mr. Bunner's little book ought to be classed among holiday volumes if only as a very pretty bit of printing and binding. Of course, however, being Mr. Bunner's it is a great deal more than this; it contains thirteen short stories, all humorous and in good taste, some of them being of very dainty fancy and finish. All are illustrated. The pictures, though small, are numerous and so good that the reader would not willingly lose any of them. The cover is quite as attractive and original as the contents.

"HYPNOTIC TALES," by James L. Ford, one of PUCK's contributors, is certainly a very funny book. The author is a clever writer, possessing a quaintly delicate sense of humor that gives to his work a particular attractiveness. He is cynical, but shows a thorough appreciation of the better as well as the weaker side of human nature.

"PUCK'S OPPER BOOK" is a pamphlet of humor issued from the office of the famous "PUCK."

Mr. FREDERICK OPPER is one of the very few genuinely comic artists in this country, and of this limited number he is probably the funniest. His pictures are funny enough to make a laugh come without the aid of letter-press. These drawings, reprinted from "PUCK," form a handsome album of some of the drollest ideas that have flowed from Mr. OPPER's pencil during the past ten years, and the person who pays thirty cents for the "Book" will easily get his money's worth.

"IN THE '400' AND OUT."

"In the '400' and Out" is a book by C. JAY TAYLOR, the inventor and delineator of the TAYLOR-MADE GIRL, first introduced to a waiting world in the pages of "PUCK."

The Comedy—"In," is a collection of clever drawings and witty dialogues, skits on Fashionable and Would-be Fashionable Society. Showing the members of the "400" and their hangers-on and imitators, and exposing many of their harmless but silly fads, manners, customs, habits, hobbies, employments, enjoyments, sports, games and pastimes.

The Farce—"Out," deals with that wide field of fun that is bounded only by a humorous imagination, and shows the comic side of unfashionable, everyday life.

All taken from more or less recent numbers of "PUCK," and printed in the very finest possible style on heavy plate paper, bound in board covers, cloth back.

What it is not.

It is not the scent; the scent is not soap.

There was a time when people used perfume instead of soap. There are people still that prefer it.

There never was and never will be, we think, a soap of high and fine perfume in which the soap is not sacrificed. Soap and perfume do not like one another.

Our Otto of Rose is a costly and perfect soap; but the scent is unsatisfactory, fine but not high.

France is full of odor; but never a soap. It has been wittily said that no one really cares for soap but those who speak English.

PEARS' SOAP is the purest soap in the world.

BEFORE AND AFTER.

Before the maiden married him
And got him in her power,
To sew a button on his coat
Would take her just an hour.

But things are very different now;
For, when her aid he seeks
To sew that button on his coat,
It takes her several weeks.

SHE MEANT IT, TOO.

"This is the woman's age," remarked Mr. Bisbee to his wife, as he read an advanced paragraph in the evening paper.

"Say woman's era, Mr. Bisbee," suggested his wife.

"And why, my dear?"

"Because no woman likes to have her age commented on," was the consistent answer. — Detroit Free Press.

WENT THROUGH.

WIFE.—Why, how on earth did you get those holes in your trousers?

HUSBAND.—I must have sat down on some of your bread crumbs. — Clothier and Furnisher.

RETRIBUTION.

His energetic action, in a spic-and-span clawhammer, would have paralyzed a buzz-saw in the fraction of a week,

And he spent a Summer season trying hard to find the reason for the mortifying music of the patent leather-squeak.

His efforts tying neckties would have taken him to China, if he'd skipped this daily torture and had started out to walk,

And the names that he invented for the scents with which he scented, if a polygot had heard them, would have turned him white as chalk.

The geometric creases in his trousers were a passion which developed in proportion to the tailors that he had,

And he passed his nights in thinking of an unknown way of prinking, which would give him proud distinction as the author of a fad.

And then he met an heiress with a taste that was aesthetic, and with all the calm assurance of the latest thing in clothes,

He sat right down and waited in a manner cultivated—but she shook him for a farmer with a wart upon his nose.

— Tom Masson, in Clothier and Furnisher.

APPRECIATED ITS VALUE.

A little Detroit girl was bidding her boy playmate good-by, and on this occasion her mother told her to kiss him. She offered him a roguish cheek, and when the salute was gravely given,
began to rub it vigorously with her handkerchief.

"Why, Laura," said her mother; "you're not rubbing it off?"

"No, Mama," answered the little maiden, de-murely; "I'm rubbing it in." — Detroit Free Press.

AMATEUR PHOTOGRAPHY.

HAWK-EYE CLUBS FORMED AND FORMING FOR ACTION.

The Gloversville (N. Y.) Leader notes the forming of the HAWK-EYE CLUB, of that city, with the usual officers and an apparent design to "take" the town and the surrounding country by "Camera" if not by "storm." "Several excellent snap-shots" adds the Leader, "have already been taken by the HAWK-EYE Camera, and they show good results." That is the story that comes to the manufacturers of the HAWK-EYE from every section of the country. Organization for this delightful pastime means improvement as to methods, and new ideas as to subjects; at the same time that it affords opportunity for extra amusement and congenial interchange of experience and suggestions.

As every wise newspaper will remark, in view of the excellence of the HAWK-EYE Cameras, "NOW IS THE TIME TO GET UP CLUBS."

A SURPRISE.

He found it in his grip one day,
Hid softly in its russet case,
And wondered much whose picture lay
In such a rude unrestful place.

And was it Katie, Maud or Sue?
The handsome drummer looked perplexed;
Those flirting girls! Perhaps they knew
That he was married—were they vexed?

Then something deep within his breast
Owned to a thrill of honest shame;
How dared they send this hidden guest?
He would return it—whose the name?

He looked. Sweet face with pictured laugh,
Bright fluffy hair in tangled curl,
And scrawled across the photograph,
In printed letters, "pApaS' gIrL."
— By Mrs. M. L. Rayne, in Detroit Free Press.

HE TOOK THE HINT.

JOSELYN.—I say, Miss Maud, don't you prefer a sloop rig to a cat rig?

MAUD.—Yes; but—but I think I like a smack better than either. — Boston Post.

THE man with the new gold watch seldom knows what time it is. — Texas Siftings.

The victim buys a handsomely furnished room for the Summer, occupies it a week—— when his best chair is taken away for a sick lady on the next floor. Then — — his pictures, curtains, &c., are subtracted to appease a sufferer on the parlor floor. —

— His bureau and rugs are returned to another victim. —

— His couch is borrowed to accommodate a visiting relative — — and only the most pitiful supplication will induce his landlady to allow him the bare necessities.
